Orland Whips Palos 7 to 0 in Thanksgiving Charity Battle

Orland Park took the measure of Palos Park in a gridiron duel staged for the benefit of local relief organizations last Thursday, Thanksgiving day, at Orland Park.

The game was closely contested and bitterly fought from start to finish, the half ending with no score on either side. A long pass to E. Bodin to start the third quarter, placed the ball deep in Palos territory from whence Kline crossed the Palos goal for a touchdown after a series of bucks had worked the ball to the Palos five-yard line.

The 4th quarter was an evenly fought affair with two high points in it, in which Palos threatened to score from the Orland nine-yard line but they were turned back on both occasions by a stubborn Orland defense.

Tinley Garden Club News and Notes

November is earth's resting time; The corn is bound in shocks, And overhead late-lingering birds To new climes fly in flocks; The calm pools left by autumn rains Are mirrors for the sky, And in their cool, sweet restfulness The bare tree branches lie.

The Tinley Park Garden Club met at the home of Mrs. John Werth on Friday, November 20th. In spite of the inclement weather there were about twenty members present, also one wee visitor from Blue Island, Master Lindsay Allan Duff. After numerous business matters were taken up and disposed of, delightful refreshments were served by the hosts.

Now kiddies, the Garden Club has been waiting for a letter from Santa Claus, but for some reason or other there has been a delay. However we expect some news any day, so be sure to watch this paper next week for I am sure there will be an important announcement in it.

Don't forget to look for this.

ADAM WOLF, COOK KN., OFFICIAL WELL KNOWN HERE DIES IN CHICAGO

Adam Wolf, a member of the board of assessors since its organization in 1898, former city treasurer and a resident of Chicago for 67 years, died at his home, 3500 Sheridan road Sunday, of pneumonia. He had been ailing for 6 months and unable much of the time to go to his office.

The veteran assessor had been an important figure in republican politics for half a century, having been elected west town assessor in 1892. He was for many years a member of the county and state republican central committees. As west town collector he claimed the distinction of having been the first tax official to turn back interest on public funds.

He was elected city treasurer in 1895 and then went to the board of assessors, his present term there having one more year to run. During all of his time on the board of assessors the republicans had a majority until the last election, when two of the sitting republicans were defeated by democrats.

Wolf was born in Staden, Germany, and came to Chicago with his parents when he was 7 years old. After receiving his education in the public schools he engaged in the dry goods business at Chicago Ave., and Paulina street under the firm name of Wilker & Wolf. When quite a young man he became fascinated with politics and finally gave up business to devote full time to this pursuit.

He was a member of several social organizations, among them being the Royal Arcanum, the National Union, the Royal League, the North American Union, the Illinois Athletic and German clubs.

Wolf was married in 1884 to Miss Anna Enders, who died several years ago. He is survived by two sons and two daughters, namely, Robert N., Herbert C., and Miss Mary Louise Wolf and Mrs. Frank Gaskill.

Mr. Wolf was quite well known to Mokena and Orland people. Mrs. Wolf was a Mokena resident in her youth.

Voice of the People

TO THE EDITOR:
Much to the credit of Mokena a flag pole and Old Glory grace the school yard of the Mokena public school since the forepart of this week. We are glad to see the flag of our nation flying over our public school now!

About two years ago when Harry Mall was mayor of Mokena he offered to donate a flag pole to the school but somehow or other the matter has lain dormant until this week.

About a week ago Mrs. J. V. Hall feeling that a finer sense or spirit of patriotism would be inculcated in the students if the flag of our nation was before them daily, she took it upon herself to secure a flagpole as nothing further had been done about Mr. Mall's flagpole offer. She started a public subscription drive for funds with which to purchase the pole and the fund was quickly secured and the pole was ordered thru the Mokena Hardware Company and arrived promptly.

Suddenly Tuesday morning a flagpole said to be a temporary one, was erected on the school grounds and now Old Glory is waving triumphantly.

Mrs. Hall was not appraised of the fact that a flagpole was being erected and when she learned what had been done, she began to refund to the donors the money they had subscribed for a flagpole.

Mrs. Hall is to be commended for her patriotic intentions which perhaps hastened the delayed erection of a flagpole. Any and all who had any part in providing the flagpole and the flag deserve credit and have nobly advanced the spirit of patriotism in our community.

DISCOVER TROPICAL SECTION WITHIN THE ARCTIC CIRCLE

Explorers Find Hot Springs in Hidden Valley.

Ottawa.—The often-ignored "land that time forgot," in Canada's far northwest, is a reality and no mere prospector's myth or fragment of Indian folklore.

Such is the positive assurance given by Dr. J. Norman Henry of Philadelphia and his companions, who are now homeward bound with the proud distinction of being the first white men who have ever gazed upon the hidden tropical valley, which lies within the Arctic circle, in northern British Columbia.

The valley remains today as it must have been in prehistoric eras, before the glacier age swept over North America—a luxurious garden of rich tropical growth, such as are now common only in the equatorial zone.

Bubbling Hot Springs.
The valley, located in the mountains near the junction of the Raging and Toad rivers, nearly 1,000 miles northwest of Edmonton, is three-quarters of a mile wide and nearly a quarter of a mile in length, and is honeycombed with bubbling hot springs, to which it owes its continued existence.

In some of the craters the water was too hot to touch, and Indian guides who know the district vow that the water in the valley does not freeze even in mid-winter when the surrounding district has a temperature of 50 degrees below zero.

The expedition was disappointed in its hope of finding prehistoric animal life in the valley, although Professor Henry believes that systematic excavation might yield well-preserved remains. The best of the vegetation had also been destroyed by fairly recent forest fires, but a number of specimens were obtained which are expected to astound the botanical world.

For centuries, the location of the "valley of steaming waters" has been a jealously guarded secret among a band of Indians inhabiting a section of the Peace river area. Their numbers have been decimated by tuberculosis and other diseases, until today only a handful remain; and, rather than see the secret lost forever, three members of the tribe consented to guide the Henry expedition to the spot. Rich in Wild Life.

From the Indian camp north of Fort St. John, a ten days' journey led the party to the valley, over a route which would have been impassable but for a collapsible rubber boat which the expedition carried and which enabled them to cross several torrential rivers.

Although no new species of animal life were uncovered, the district is rich in game—moose, caribou, mountain sheep, bear and goats being seen in large numbers. Miss Mary Henry, daughter of the expedition's leader, shot two splendid mountain sheep.

The botanical end of the expedition was directed by Mrs. Henry, who collected large numbers of specimens which will be presented to the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia, and the Royal Botanical Gardens, Edinburgh. Doctor Henry, leader of the expedition, is a retired physician, and a former college mate of Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National railways.

A marshmallow rolled in cinnamon makes a delicious addition to the cup of cocoa.

Sandpapering baby's shoes before they are worn prevents slipping and saves many a fall.

Whip cream in a pitcher. It stiffens more quickly than in an open bowl and with less spatter.

Before washing a woolen sweater which has buttons and buttonholes, sew up the buttonholes to prevent their stretching.

Boiling water should be poured at once over fruit stains on linen tablecloths. Milk—used immediately—will remove ink stains.

When making sauces for puddings always stir in the same direction. It makes no difference what direction as long as it is always the same.

When roasting chicken or turkey place the fowl with the breast down in the baking pan for the first half-hour of roasting. This allows the juices to flow into the breast, making it moist and tender.

Raid on Sheep Corral Brings Dog Curfew Law

American Fork, Utah.—A dog curfew has been invoked in this little Utah town. Every canine found on the streets between 7 p. m. and 6 a. m. runs the risk of being shot on sight. The measure was taken after a nocturnal raid on a corral, in which 50 sheep were killed or maimed.

THE SIMPLE LIFE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Emeritus Dean of Men,
University of Illinois.

Doc was polishing up my dental machinery and putting in new parts and getting everything in good shape and proper working order. Doc is a philosopher, and while he has my mouth pried open so that he may more easily and efficiently do his work, he regales me with his opinions of life in general. I am, of course, in no position to reply.

He has just bought a new motor car, high powered, easy riding, simple to operate, and he is advising me to do the same thing. The price is moderate, he assures me, which naturally makes the prospect more alluring. He tells me about a wonderful trip he had last summer, and then he drifts to the complicated character of life as we live it now in civilized North America. Everything moves fast, everyone is trying to outdo his neighbor. We wear ourselves out in trying to get at the head of the procession which, no matter how rapidly we go, always seems to keep ahead of us. We are never at home, never quiet, never satisfied. Life seems to grow more involved and more complex every year.

It was not always so. When we were young we had time to stay at home, time to sit and talk with our friends without likelihood of interruption, time to read, and, if we were so disposed, time to meditate.

Doc thinks he would keenly enjoy the simple life. He has been reading recently the story of how people live in some of the South Sea Islands. The climate is equable, there is no frost in winter and in summer the waters of the Pacific washing the shores of the islands keep them refreshingly cool and pleasant.

It is a wonderfully simple life and as one views it in prospect it seems to bring complete relief from the complexities with which we are harrassed in this Twentieth century.

I'm wondering if we would like it after all. Perpetual sunshine might grow monotonous. We would probably lose our appetite for breadfruit. We'd long for new clothes and motor cars and movies and electric lights, and all those things. Maybe life might be too simple.

Head Bumps

Phrenology was originated by F. J. Gall early in the Nineteenth century. He believed that men with certain prominences of the skull possessed definite qualities to a marked degree. He classified individuals with regard to their skull formation after studying hundreds of cases of a given group, such as poets, musicians, etc. One authority has said "the whole system is a tissue of baseless assumptions."

Horns of Lost Cattle Herd Enrich Texas Man

San Antonio, Texas.—Remains of a lost herd of longhorn cattle, famous in the history of the Texas range, have been found by L. D. Berillion of Mineola, Texas, and their horns have made him rich.

In 1812 Jacob Don Lonerr's entire herd of several thousand longhorns stampeded in a storm near Terlingua creek. They were never found.

That is, not until Berillion trailed a nearby canyon to a cave opening and found a great heap of bones and horns. Berillion has since sold more than $50,000 worth of horns, and is now negotiating for a sale to the prince of Wales.

This Mother Had Problem

As a rule, milk is about the best food for children, but there are times when they are much better off without it. It should always be left off when children show by feverish, fretful or cross spells, by bad breath, coated tongue, sallow skin, indigestion, biliousness, etc., that their stomach and bowels are out of order.

In cases like this, California Fig Syrup never fails to work wonders, by the quick and gentle way it removes all the souring waste which is causing the trouble, regulates the stomach and bowels and gives these organs tone and strength so they continue to act normally of their own accord. Children love its rich, fruity flavor and it's purely vegetable and harmless, even for babies.

Millions of mothers have proved its merit and reliability in over 50 years of steadily increasing use. A Western mother, Mrs. May Snively, Montrose, California, says: "My little girl, Edna's, tendency to constipation was a problem to me until I began giving her California Fig Syrup. It helped her right away and soon her stomach and bowels were acting perfectly. Since then I've never had to have any advice about her bowels. I have also used California Fig Syrup with my little boy, with equal success."

To be sure of getting the genuine, which physicians endorse, always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name.

NEARING END OF PATHWAY OF LIFE

Philosopher Comments on "Second Childhood."

"I had a rather interesting conversation with a gentleman the other day," said George B. Cautious, at the weekly meeting of the Rowan club, "and my thoughts since then have convinced me that I should speak of the occurrence here and now. This gentleman, of whom I speak, had been one of my friends a good many years ago, but I had not seen him for a long time. After the usual preliminary greetings were out of the way, and we had exchanged information about our physical, mental and financial condition, he told me that he had four grandchildren. I congratulated him upon that fact, and we were about to separate, as each of us had engagements. It was as we were taking leave of each other that he said he was in his second childhood, and he added, 'I am having a great deal more fun than I had in my first.'"

"Gentlemen, it seems improper to consider any subject, however trivial it may be, without inquiring into its background. So it is with second childhood. I had a certain conception of that period of human existence and I imagine that your conception and mine are in substantial agreement. I even went to some of the authorities, to ascertain what they might have to say about the matter, and their opinions startled me to some extent, although they were more or less in line with what I had subconsciously believed. They said that second childhood is that time of life when the physical and mental powers begin to wane, more particularly the latter. They gave quotations from famous authors who had used the expressions in connection with men who were glib enough with their tongues, but whose judgment had been so warped by age that their opinions no longer were of value.

"But are we required to be bound by popular conceptions of subjects, or even by traditions? Is there any reason why second childhood should be no more than a waiting period, with one foot in the grave and the other trembling on the brink? To both of these inquiries I am inclined to give a positive negative. I am convinced that second childhood is what we make it and that my friend may have been right. He may be having a great deal more fun in that period he calls his second childhood than he had in his first.

"Legally we are infants until we are twenty-one years of age. Actually some of us mature earlier, and there is good reason to believe that womanly intuition always permits a girl to be wiser than a boy. However, we go through our first childhood, groping for knowledge, bound down by discipline and yearning for independence. Many of the things we would like to do are denied us and finally we attain our majority with pleasant recollections of our youth, with a thankful feeling that our elders prevented us from making fools of ourselves, but at the same time a little dubious about some decisions. We have that secret feeling that if we had been left to our own devices we might have had more fun, and been none the worse for it. Then comes a period of responsibility, when we have to earn a living for ourselves and generally for our families. Before we realize it we are along in years, as the expression goes; we are old enough to be regarded ancient by the rising generation, but at the same time our hearts may be young, our spirits undaunted and our lives not wholly in the past. I wonder if, when that period of second childhood approaches, we should put on a solemn expression, and be nothing more than venerable graybeards. Certain it is that men battle against this condition in their own minds, but tradition has branded them, they are old, and youth says to them, 'act your age.' It seems to me that a new part might be written for age to act, and if the individual wishes to have a youthful fling, that is his own business. Gentlemen, let us agree to make second childhood a more agreeable time of life than it has been hitherto."—Indianapolis News.

Fought Fire With Melons

He hurled watermelons at the blazing truck. They burst and spouted water all over the blaze. The twenty-third melon put out the fire.

"Icy streets and steps are dangerous," points out the December safety poster just issued by the Chicago Motor club to more than 36,000 schoolrooms in Illinois and northern Indiana.

In a letter, which accompanied the poster, to teachers the club urged that the children be reminded that when the streets are slippery from ice or snow, the hazard involved in crossing them is much greater than when the pavement is dry. Not only are pedestrians more likely to slip in ice and snow but also motor vehicles are more prone to skid when they are being slowed down or brought to a stop, on account of pedestrians being in the roadway. A good general rule for children to keep in mind, it was pointed out to teachers, is that when the weather is bad, caution should be doubled.

Accident statistics indicate that icy steps comprise no less a menace to life and limb than do slippery roadways. Therefore, caution when stepping off the front porch is just as imperative as when crossing a street under these conditions.

"THE VINEGAR TREE" AT THE SELWYN THEATRE.

"The Vinegar Tree," a gay comedy of medium height, has settled down at the Selwyn Theatre, Chicago, for a limited engagement. It has all the ingredients that make for a grand evening in the theatre. Then, too, it has Mary Boland, who is giving one of the grandest performances of her illustrious career.

The rather acidic-sounding title, VINEGAR TREE, is more or less a symbol of the leading role as played by Miss Boland. It means a bright, soft indefinite species of the well-known sumac, known to botanists and playwrights as the "staghorn sumac, or vinegar tree". It can be seen everywhere, particularly throughout New England, its rich, wine-red hue fairly overcoming the fall landscape with long bunches of velvety crimson berries and pastel foliage. Those who know about such things claim that this extraordinary plant is continually changing the growing plants of its neighboring and often harder flower. In human characteristics it would most certainly be described as erratic, scatter-brained, and utterly irresponsible.

Just how far this symbol should be carried to clarify the title, VINEGAR TREE, hasn't been determined; but at any rate in Miss Boland's interpretation you get all the frivolity, color, and wild gaiety generally attributed to this member of the sumac family.

The bright thread of the story concerns the foibles and fancies of Miss Boland as the scatter-brained, adorably foolish wife, who imagines herself a martyr to love. She has carried an old romance with an artist to great imaginative heights.

That love and its mauve memory has meant her spiritual happiness, she believes, through her succeeding married years. The ensuing meeting with this old beau, with a sister, whom she hasn't seen in fifteen years, and with her own love-bitten daughter returned from college, all takes place in a week-end on Long Island. The opportunities for gorgeous comedy scenes are many, and the distinguished cast has seized them admirably. In the supporting company are H. Reeves-Smith, Fredric Worlock, Helen Brooks, Jean Shelby and Alan Campbell.

SONG OF THE WEEK

I Apologize

If I told a lie, If I made you cry, When I said good-bye I'm sorry

Reproduced by permission of the copyright owners.

is nicely written and intelligently handled.

Songs like this one are especially appealing in the fact that they bring a bit of freshness into the "boy and girl" situation, through the suggestion of a lover's quarrel. That coupled with the really outstanding melody of "I Apologize" leads me to pick it as my "Song of the Week."

Incidentally, when I sang it recently on one of my Cremo programs, I had more requests to repeat it than any number I have sung in some time.

P. T. A. Congress Seeks Financial Aid For Public Schools

Realizing that the present disturbing financial situation of the schools
is not peculiar to any one locality, but is felt by many communities, the Executive Committee of the Illinois Congress of Parents and Teachers in special session in Chicago, November 24th passed the following resolutions:

To the Governor and Members of the Legislature of the State of Illinois:

Whereas, the school children of Illinois are suffering and the future effective citizenship of the state is being jeopardized by the chaotic financial condition in the schools, and

Whereas, teachers in Chicago and many other communities throughout Illinois have been working for months without a salary payment, and

Whereas, certain economies, proposed or in effect, take from our children a part of that best education to which they are entitled, and

Whereas, the educational conditions of any one part of the state react upon the educational conditions in the whole state,

Be It Resolved, that the Illinois
Congress of Parents and Teachers, with a state membership of 120,000
calls upon the Governor and the Legislature of this state to enact at this special session such measures as will unhindered and adequately finance the tax-supported educational institutions of the state, keeping in mind
the fact that the whole wealth of Illinois should be called upon to bear
its share of such support.

MILTON speaks in one of his poems about "A feast of nectar'd sweets." If he had had before him a gay bowl piled high with fruit-flavored Christmas candies, he could not have described them better. It is the fruit that gives them the delicious nectar-like taste—and it makes them healthful too; easy to digest
so that the very young and the very old can have a goodly share,
as they should at Christmas time.
The recipes given below will tell you how to make candies of this kind, and this is what to do with them.

Candies a Gay Note

You probably have some metal molds, the kind you use for puddings and jellies and ices. They come in all sorts of fanciful forms,
stars, flowers, fish and animals.
Line them with red paper, fill them with the candies and set them on mantelpieces and fireside tables and in the guest rooms.
They give a charming Christmas
note to the house. A large mold filled with the candies, encircled by a holly wreath and flanked by red candles in silver candlesticks can be used as a centerpiece for an informal Christmas supper.

Another nice thing to do with home-made Christmas candies is to make gifts of them. You can put them in amusing little bags
such as the French use for bonbons. Ordinary shelf paper with a lace edge makes very pretty bags. The all-white variety is especially effective with the lace edge at the top of the bag, which should be tied four-sack fashion with broad ribbon. Bright, dark blue ribbon is pretty for this purpose and blue stars in several sizes may be pasted onto the bag

in a haphazard manner, or silver ribbon and silver stars may be used.

Gift Candies

Candy bags for children should be very gay. Pictures cut from nursery books may be applied as decoration, and bright lines or waves of color may be painted with water colors along the top edge inside and out.

Italian hand-blocked papers make beautiful candy sacks, and these may be tied with broad colored linen tape in imitation of the linen ribbon which is used so much in Italy. Finish the top edge of the bag with a line or a little decorative motif in gold paint.

The fancy wrapping papers which the shops bring out at Christmas are perfect for bonbon
bags—nothing could be nicer.
Scraps of old chintz or brocades or of silver or gold cloth can be made into more durable bags which may later be used for sewing accessories or but ons. Don't forget to wrap your candies for the fabric bags in glazed paper.

And Now—The Recipes!

Pineapple Creams: Boil together two cups sugar, two-thirds cup milk and one-fourth cup butter, to soft ball stage, 258°. Add one teaspoon lemon juice, and color pale green. Cool, and beat very stiff. Add one-half cup crushed Hawaiian pineapple, four tablespoons chopped maraschino cherries, four tablespoons chopped

mint cherries—all well drained.
Drop by small spoonfuls on a greased sheet.

Apricot Fudge: Melt two squares chocolate carefully, without burning. Add two cups sugar, and mix well. Then add two-thirds cup condensed milk, one-half cup water and four tablespoons white corn syrup; let cook, without stirring, to 234°. Let two tablespoons butter melt over top without stirring, cool to 120°, add two-thirds cup chopped dried apricots, and beat until creamy.
Pour into buttered pan.

Fruit Cubes

Strawberry Jelly Cubes: Press
contents eight-ounce can of strawberries through sieve, making a puree. Add half cup pectin syrup, half cup sugar, half cup corn syrup, half tablespoon lemon juice, boil to 222°. Pour into greased pan so that mixture is about half inch thick. Let stand over night in cool place. Cut into cubes;
roll in powdered sugar.

Grapefruit Panoche: Cook
eight-ounce can grapefruit and three tablespoons sugar to thick jam, or 222°. Mix three cups brown sugar, two-thirds cup condensed milk, two-thirds cup water,
three tablespoons white corn syrup, and one tablespoon butter to 230°. Add jam, and continue boiling to 234°. Cool to 120°, beat until creamy, add one-fourth cup chopped pecans, and pour into a buttered pan.

Frigidaire Popular As Christmas Gifts

Preparing for an increased public demand for electric refrigerators
this Christmas, Frigidaire Corporation during the first part of November increased shipments materially above those for the like period of last year, it was announced by E. G.
Biechler, president and general manager.

"It is evident," he said, "that this Christmas will be marked, even more so than the last one, by the giving of practical gifts. We found that electric refrigerators were popular Christmas gifts last year because they combine utility with sentiment. This year we have every reason to believe Santa will bring more of these household servants to American homes than he did in 1930."

The heavy shipments of early November, it was pointed out, will make it possible for Frigidaire representatives in every city and town to show a full line of these household electric refrigerators at their showroom Christmas exhibits, now being opened for the public.

"There are many reasons," Mr.
Biechler continued, "for the increasing popularity of electric refrigerators as Christmas gifts. They are gifts which will be remembered every day in the year. They make the lot of the homemaker easier by eliminating much work, ending refrigeration worries and reducing the number of trips to food stores. In addition, they save money by reducing food spoilage losses, by making it possible for the housewife to take advantage of quantity food prices and Saturday bargains and by the low operating cost."

"Besides guarding the health and the pocketbook of the family, the modern electric refrigerator opens to the homemaker a new world in food preparation. This is known as 'cold cookery', and includes chilled and frozen desserts and salads, and many other things."

TELEPHONE SERVICE TO REACH WEST TO HAWAII

Voice Link to Pacific Islands
Scheduled to Open in 1932

The building program to house
the wireless equipment which in 1932 will be sending telephone conversations leaping some 2,100 miles through space between this country and Hawaii is under way. One building is located some distance from Dixon, Cal., in a flat and barren area with scarcely a habitation for miles around. The location of the other station is within sound of the Pacific at Point Reyes, Cal., a desolate spot where sand dunes are the chief feature of the landscape.

Scheduled for opening next year,
telephone service to Hawaii will be the first extension of voice communication directly westward from this country. These island possessions already enjoy a thoroughly modern telephone service, with some 25,000 telephones in use, of which over 70 per cent are dial telephones.

The receiving station for the Hawaiian telephone system will be near Kahuku Point, about 30 miles from Honolulu, while the transmitting equipment will be near Koko
Head, some 12 miles from that city.
Calls between Hawaii and this country will pass through the long distance switchboard of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company
in San Francisco.

The Hawaiian Islands, well out in the Pacific Ocean, will be the present western terminus of calls from this country. Extension of radio telephone service from the United States to the Orient is entirely practicable, but depends upon the development of transmitting and receiving equipment in the countries of the Far East.

DENVER'S FEDERAL BUILDING HAS BIG SWITCHBOARD

The largest United States Government private branch telephone exchange outside of Washington, D.
C., is now located in the newly completed Federal building in Denver, Colo. It serves both the Federal building and the Post Office building near by. It is also the largest private branch exchange
board in Denver, with the exception of the one used in the offices of the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Are We Created Unequal?

"The biological discoveries of a half-century or more," Prof. Harrison R. Hunt told the Eugenics Research association, "have revealed that people, instead of being potentially equal at birth, vary enormously, and that such differences are often inherited; so one might say it is self-evident that men are created unequal."

"Does your husband ever brag what a good cook his mother was?" asked the caller.

STOP THAT COUGH!

Bronchitis is increasingly prevalent at this season. Alone, it is seldom serious, although the cough may be very annoying. But the serious side of Bronchitis and other mild infections of the lungs and throat is that the inflamed tissues may be invaded by some far more serious organism, particularly Pneumonia.

This is a real danger in most cases. It is the best of reasons why a bronchial cough or an attack of laryngitis should be stopped as quickly as possible.

The quick effective way to check these troubles is to apply B. & M., The Penetrating Germicide, three times a day, spreading it over the entire chest and throat. Usually the first application will bring out a red-dish flush showing where the trouble is.

B. & M. is obtainable from most druggists. If yours cannot supply it, send his name and $1.25 for a large-size bottle sent postpaid. Helpful booklet free on request. F. E. ROLLINS COMPANY, 53 Beverly St., Boston, Mass.—Adv.

WOMEN: watch your BOWELS

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

When you're a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all drug stores keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

THE STORY

Six bandits board the steamer, Midnight Sun, tied to the bank of the Mackenzie, hold up Father Claverly and other passengers, kill Jimmy Montgomery, former-ly of the Mounted, and get away with gold dust and furs. Corp. Bill Hardcock reports the crime to Sgt. Alan Baker at the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance. Baker has a dispute with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, over plans for the capture of the bandits. Baker starts out with five men. At the MacMillan trading post, Joyce MacMillan is alone, awaiting the return of her father. She is thrilled to see Baker. She had hoped to marry him, but had been stunned by news of his engagement to Elizabeth Spaulding. From his talk she learns that the marriage is not certain.

CHAPTER IV

Rifles in the Prow

During the meal, as Joyce sat at the head of the table pouring coffee and watching a pan of biscuit in the stove, Alan kept studying her, wondering how any girl could stand the isolation and poverty and lonely battle she was enduring. Two whole years here, two years out of her young womanhood, the choice time of her life, sacrificed at this isolated trading post, giving up everything that a girl holds dear! She was too fine to be leading a life like this. She ought to get out of it. There was a limit to her bravery and spirited strength.

As the men were pushing back their chairs and reaching for pipes, he felt some one prodding him with a boot under the table. Looking up, he saw Larry elevate an eyebrow at him.

"Wants to talk with me alone," Alan surmised; and he gave Larry a slight nod. To the other men he said rather sharply: "You men, put away your pipes and police up these dishes. Don't leave a stack like this for Joyce. Bill, you see to that."

Casually going outside a few moments later, he glanced around and saw Larry waiting for him a dozen yards away, over near the storage shed. Sauntering across, he asked quietly:

"What's up now, Larry?"

Larry flipped his cigarette aside. "Come in here with me, Alan. I want to show you something."

Producing a pocket flash, he played its yellow shaft upon a pack of furs on a low shelf.

"Alan, you see that wolf skin they're wrapped in? That's what caught my eye. It's a Yukon animal, probably from the Kayukuk headwaters in the Endicott mountains. It made me curious, so I pried into the pack and saw these dark otter. They came from the Yukon, too. I thought to myself, 'There's no wolf or otter like them in Dave MacMillan's trading territory.' But say, Alan, look—(hold the flash a minute)—look here." Larry pulled out several of the rich, dark-gleaming otter pelts and rolled back the fur at the broad end. "Take a good look at them blue stamp marks."

Alan bent closed and he suddenly gasped.

"Good Lord! They're L. & H. furs! What're they doing here, Larry—in Dave MacMillan's possession?"

"Stolen! What else? What's more to us, Alan, I checked on them serial numbers, and this bunch is one of the packs stolen from the Midnight Sun!" He added slowly: "Maybe we don't know yet who these six strangers are, but now we sure'n h—l know who's directing 'em!"

In low tones, there in the darkness, they talked the situation over.

Larry finally asked: "You're going to arrest him, Alan? An accomplice that way, even if he didn't have a hand in the actual killing, they'll give him the limit. It'll be h—l on Joyce."

Alan stirred. His voice was torn with pain. "I don't know what I'll . . . But I'll have to do something about it."

After a little silence he directed: "Larry, you go down and relieve Ped. Don't tell these other men anything about this yet."

When Larry had gone, Alan left the musty-smelling shed, and walked up along the side of the trading hall to Joyce's window. As he came up, purposefully cracking a stick, he had a glimpse of her whole room. Its furniture was a dresser, a chair originally straight but with a pair of rockers fitted to it, a sheet-iron stove with woodbox against the wall, and a bed which he knew had been a condemned barracks cot. But Joyce had somehow lifted the bleak room almost to cheeriness. There were birchbark creels of great-spurred violets and Arctic primulas and adder's-tongue on the dresser, some sprigs of bright-red berries above it, a wolf-rug across the foot of the bed, and on the dresser a picture of himself, of her former employer down in Ottawa, of her dad and mother.

She had heard him and turned toward the window and recognized him in the weak light.

He said: "Joyce, I've got to talk with you. Maybe you'd better come out here where we'll be alone."

She stepped to the window.

As Alan helped her down, trying to say lightly, "It's unlucky, Joyce, to come through a window that way," he felt the hard bulge of that little bulldog automatic pressed against him. At least his gift was still protection to her.

He suggested: "Let's go a little farther away, Joyce. I don't want that long-eared Whipple overhearing this."

Rather aimlessly, he led her a stone-toss west of the storage shed to a little clear place in the spruces. Trying to prepare her in some measure, he told her of Larry going into the shed, happening to notice a strange pack of furs, examining them, seeing the L. & H. marks and the serial numbers. He hesitated a moment then, with Joyce frowning perplexedly at those strange furs being in the shed; but there was no mercy possible now, and he took the final step.

"Joyce, I hate myself for telling you this. But you've got to know. Those furs in your father's shed are one of the packs stolen from the Midnight Sun."

"Stolen? From the Midnight Sun? But Alan! What—what's it doing here?"

"This afternoon while you were asleep, Joyce, your father, or else one of these bandits, put the furs in there. That pack is—it must be his share in the arrangement. Joyce, your father is somehow connected with these bandits."

Realization came slowly to Joyce. Then sharply, like an instinctive defense, came passionate disbelief and anger; and she drew a little away from him.

"I'm sorry, sorry," he said in heartfelt sympathy. "You father used to be my friend. And he's your father; that's what hurts the worst."

Joyce drew still farther back from him, with her eyes flashing, with a defiant toss of her head. He believed

Without a Word of Reply or Self-Protection He Took All She Had to Tell Him.

her father guilty! He had gone prying around for evidence! He was blind! Heartless! A man-hunting wolf! Inhuman! Worse. . .

Alan was thoroughly surprised. He had seen Joyce handle insolent Indians and breeds, shooting their dialects at them like fluted Yellowknife arrows; but with him, with Bill, with her father, she had always been as quiet as a summer wind. The way she was assailing him now, defending her father, revealed a new depth to her nature.

Without a word of reply or self-protection, he took all she had to tell him. He felt that her anger was not so much against him personally as against the inexorable duty he represented.

"Joyce, please don't," he begged. "Please listen. Maybe I am inhuman and a wolf, and've got sawdust where my brains ought to be. But also I'm . . . Don't you understand how I'm between the devil and the deep sea?"

She looked up, with tears still glistening on her cheeks.

"Alan, I don't believe—oh, I can't believe—that pack. Alan, say it isn't so!"

Her bewildered misery tugged at Alan. He wanted to comfort her with some lie. But he dared not build up any hope, for he knew it would only prove a tragic disappointment to her in the end.

"Joyce, we've got to believe. The pack is there. No use going over to see if it is. Larry and I made no mistake. We mustn't blind ourselves to the truth."

She suggested eagerly: "Don't you think these furs might have got there some way besides—besides. . . Alan! Don't you see?—that pack was planted there! Those men knew you'd find it, and stop, and investigate, and arrest my dad! That would give them time and chance to escape—"

As gently as he could, Alan interrupted her. "No, Joyce. Your dad wasn't framed. Larry and I talked that possibility over. If those men had reasoned as you suggest, they'd have put the furs in a conspicuous place where we'd have been sure to find them. The pack wasn't planted. Let's not delude ourselves."

"Joyce, let's try to look at the evidence as others will see it. Your father is absent, and has been for four days, just at this particular time. There is the question of these bandits being strangers and yet getting about this country so well. There's the fact that he was bitter against the big companies and probably was tempted to retaliate against them in the only way in his power. And, Joyce, there's the tale of furs; that evidence alone is enough to prove a connection. . ."

Joyce listened to him piling up the evidence, but the entire staggering total of it did not sway her. Against it she set all she knew of her father's nature. In her whole life she had never seen him enter a penny of false debt against the most ignorant Indian, or deviate a hair's breadth from his word of honor. She often had thought that the only person in the world her dad had ever wronged was himself. Though he had been drinking heavily and taking up with none-too-unwilling Indian women, it seemed contrary to his whole nature to plot with bandits, to gang with murderers.

As Alan finished his reluctant indictment, her resolve hardened. . . She was going to fight for her father and defend him with every weapon in her power.

One way shot into her mind. Her proud head dropped a little, and she asked hesitantly: "Alan, do you have to arrest him? Only you and Mr. Younge and I know about these furs being here. If you could—if we could some way cover it up—"

She checked the plea. She could not bring herself to put Alan in so fearful a dilemma. Looking up, she met his gaze squarely again. "No, I can't ask that of you. I'd never ask that."

He chose his words very carefully. "The question with me, Joyce, is this: How deeply is your father involved? I can't think he'd go the whole length with these bandits. I can't think he'd countenance murder or even so brazen a robbery as these men staged. Perhaps they deluded him about their intentions. If they're caught, they're going to lie and throw as much of the blame on him as they can. But if I can have the truth as a working basis, I can nail their lies. We can't hope to save him from a penalty, but we maybe can save him from the—the worst."

Joyce blanched at the last word, at the specter it aroused. Her father stood charged with murder. In her heart the Law suddenly became a tangible and fearsome thing.

Alan went on: "You stand a better chance of getting the truth from him than I do, Joyce. He'd suspect me if I tried to talk to him. But with you he'd be more frank and open. When he comes in, won't you try to find out what you can?"

"You mean I'm to watch him and gather what hints I can, and perhaps ask questions that seem innocent?"

"That's exactly it, Joyce. Exactly what I mean. If you'll do that for me, if you'll help me that much . . . Joyce, don't you see why I told you this? Don't you see it's because I'm going to stick with you? I won't see your dad railroaded. I'll help him to the limit I can—because he's your father."

He was facing her in the ghostly morning light. Again he was conscious that his four months of absence, breaking the friendship between them, had invested her with an aura of strangeness to him; and that all during this brief fateful visit he had become aware of her in a quickened sense. How brave and comradely a girl! And in spite of her hard life here, in spite of her efforts to be a good bush-logger, how winsome and girlish and adorable she was!

World Honors Its Brave Men of Army and Navy

The Congressional medal of honor is the highest American award for valor. It is granted only to officers of enlisted men of the army who in action involving actual conflict with the enemy distinguish themselves conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of their lives above and beyond the call of duty. There is also a corresponding medal of honor for the navy. The Distinguished Service medal, established in 1918, may be awarded to "any person who, while serving in any capacity with the army of the United States, shall distinguish himself or herself by specially meritorious service to the government in a duty of great responsibility." There is a corresponding medal for the navy. The Distinguished Service cross is purely an army decoration to reward individual extraordinary acts of heroism in connection with military operations against an armed enemy. There is also a navy cross. Some of the most notable foreign decorations are: British Victoria cross; French Legion of Honor; German Iron cross; Belgian Order of Leopold; Japanese Order of the Rising Sun; Italian Order of St. Maurice, etc.

Industrial Railroads

Many large industrial corporations build and operate railroads as adjuncts of their plants. The outstanding example is the United States Steel corporation, which operates 3,500 miles of railroad, counting double track and sidings, or more than enough trackage to cross the continent.

Lesson for December 6

ROME AND BEYOND

GOLDEN TEXT—I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.
LESSON TEXT—II Timothy 4:6-18.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul Finishes His Work.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul Finishes His Work.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Missionary Work Goes On. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Unto the Ends of the Earth.

I. Paul's View of Death (v. 6).
This he sets forth under two metaphors:

1. An offering (v. 6). "I am ready to be offered." This figure, meaning a drink offering, or libation, shows that Paul was looking forward to a violent death. The shedding of his blood was to be an offering poured out on the sacred altar as an act of worship. Death can only be an offering to God when the life has been wholly yielded to the doing of God's will.

2. A departure (v. 6). "The time of my departure is at hand." The same idea is expressed in Phil. 1:23. "Departure" is a nautical term which signifies the loosing of a ship from its moorings in order to enter upon its voyage, but its beginning. It indicates that the vessel is outward bound. The anchor is being lifted, and the sails are being spread for the homeland. The same idea is expressed in Luke 9:31, where the theme of conversation on the Mount of Transfiguration is said to be the departure or exodus which Christ should accomplish at Jerusalem. What the exodus meant to Israel, and more, death means to the Christian.

II. Paul's Backward Glance at Life (v. 7).
God has a definite purpose for each life. Life should be so spent that at its close one may look back with a definite consciousness that the divine purpose has been accomplished. This backward look is presented in three figures:

1. "I have fought a good fight." The figure here is that of a soldier. The Christian life is a warfare. Conflicts, dangers, and temptations must be met.

2. "I have finished my course." The figure here is that of an athlete who sets out to win a race. The Christian life is a race to be run.

3. "I have kept the faith." The figure is that of a husbandman to whom had been entrusted a treasure. This treasure was the Christian faith. In a peculiar way Paul was made steward of the Christian faith. He was conscious of having been faithful to the trust committed to him.

III. Paul's Forward Look to the Future (v. 8).
This is a beautiful picture of the calm at the end of a period of faithful service. Knowing that death was awaiting him, there was no dark cloud.

1. He saw before him a life with God. Eternal fellowship with God is a prize greatly to be desired.

2. A prize was laid up for him—a crown of righteousness. This reward will be given at the coming of the Lord to all who love his appearing.

IV. Paul's Associates (vv. 9-12).
1. Demas, the deserter (v. 10). Demas has become immortalized as one who was religious, but because of its attractions went after the world. The love of the world caused him to turn his back upon principle, friendship, honor, and duty.

2. Luke, the faithful (v. 11). What a comfort it must have been to have with him this one faithful soul. Perhaps he was the best fitted of all to minister unto Paul. Luke was faithful in shipwreck, imprisonment, in journeying by land and sea.

3. Mark, the restored runaway (v. 11). Mark had gone back but was restored. This is a beautiful picture and most comforting. Though we have failed, we can redeem ourselves and become trustworthy. Everyone who has taken to heart his failure should be given another chance.

V. Personal Matters (vv. 13-18).
1. Bring the cloak, books, and parchments (v. 13). In the jail the cloak would be needed for his comfort. The books and parchments would be required for his study and writing.

2. Wronged by Alexander, the copper-smith (vv. 14, 15). We have no way of determining just when this deed was committed.

3. Defended by the Lord though forsaken by man (vv. 16-18): Paul in his last trying hours was like his Lord—left alone. He says, "All men forsook me. It was said of Christ that all forsook him and fled. Paul manifested a like spirit. 'I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.'"

The Spiritual Christian
Normally, the spiritual Christian will be occupied with effective service for his Lord. This is not a rule. We need only to know that we are yielded and ready to do whatever he may choose. To "rest in the Lord" is one of the essential victories in a spiritual life. "Come ye apart and rest awhile." We are just as spiritual when resting, playing, sleeping, or incapacitated, if it is his will for us, as we are when serving.—Christian Cynosure.

Unusual Fertility

If producing unusual things is any indication of land's fertility, the farm land around West Memphis, Ark., must be unusually fertile. J. W. Stotts went to his garden to gather vegetables. Pulling a radish, he found that it was a twin radish, two well-developed radishes growing together. He next gathered tomatoes and found quadruplet tomatoes. Encouraged by that, Mr. Stotts next picked cabbage and harvested one with seven heads.—Exchange.

The first step towards relief is to rid the body of impure wastes. And for this nothing is better than genuine Castoria! Castoria is a pure vegetable preparation made specially for babies and children. This means it is mild and gentle; that it contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. Yet it always gets results!  thorough housecleaning. He also deplored the fact there is a dearth of F. A. Tooley of Mokena gave a pleasing talk on the need of cooperation of all taxpayers to work for equality of assessments and valuations. He urged his hearers to be fair to themselves and their neighbors.

Attorney Krusemark in his remarks assailed the present political system and said it was all wrong.
 He showed how political patronage
 is used to get votes and that office holders are afraid to do their duty to the public on account of the big stick held over them by big interests. The office holders must ride along in the band wagon or suffer
 the consequences if they refuse.

He assailed the effort of Senator
 R. J. Barr to have the gas tax raised to 5 cents as an emergency measure.
 Attorney Krusemark said "Do not be fooled, if the five cent gas tax is placed on the statute books it will not be only a relief measure, but it will be a permanent tax."

Attorney Krusemark favored a securities tax as exists in Wisconsin,
 Michigan and Minnesota.

Attorney Krusemark said that the best weapon the taxpayers have to fight unjust politicians and political wrongs, is the ballot box.

MOKENA

George Magrel, Mokena barber presented a bill for damages done to his electric barber pole during Halloween to the village board at their meeting last Wednesday night, but the board turned the bill down on the ground that if this claim were paid every resident whose out house or shed had been overturned could come in for damages. Emil Mau, one of the special policemen hired for the Halloween period, told the board that the barber pole had been damaged before Halloween night.

Slippery Pavement Is Resurfaced

Workman for the state highway department began to lay a surface of tar and gravel on a five-mile stretch of brick pavement on Lincoln highway west of Chicago Heights last week. The stretch had been resurfaced with brick this year.

The order to put on the new tar
 and gravel coating, it was revealed, followed the report of three weeks ago that in rainy weather the brick pavement was so slippery that it caused an unusually large number of accidents. The brick extends from a mile and a half west of Chicago
 Heights to the Will county line.

Three weeks ago the Dettmerring garage at Matteson reported that as many as 15 wrecks a day were occcurring during rains on the newly resurfaced highway.

The brick resurfacing west of Chicago Heights was part of the 63 miles of similar work in Illinois this year approved by Gov. Emmerson.
 There were protests that it would be just as cheap to widen the highway to forty feet of concrete. The old concrete, 16 to 18 feet wide,
 was deteriorating rapidly.
